"It is strange we should have put off so long looking into our Government to see whether it is run according to the rules we originally laid down for it, but it is certain that we are now looking into it very sharply, indeed, and without the least danger that we shall be deceived again as to its character, "Our idea of it has been from the first that it was a genuine partnership, and that all of us were partners, and that there was no ranking of junior and senior partners—that nobody had any preference over anybody else in the arrangement, but that all were upon one footing and were to share alike.

"But a very interesting thing has come to light—that is not, in fact, the way the Government has been administered in our time, but something very different. It has been in the hands of self-constituted trustees and the partners have seldom been allowed a real governing voice in its administra-

We had supposed that we were conducting the national business along lines laid down by Jefferson, but we find, as a matter of fact, we have been conducting it along the lines laid down by Hamilton. "Hamilton believed that the comdirected only by those who led in commercial and industrial enterprises and owned the chief bodies of property in the country. And in our time the leaders of the Republican party have consciously or unconsciously adopted this notion.

"At any rate, whether they have adopted the notion of not, they have adopted a practice which exactly fitted it, for they have called into consultation in every vital matter only those who had the biggest material stake in the economical development of the country. These men financed party campaigns and were always on the inside when party policy was to be de-ermined.

"Tariff schedules, the foreign policy of the country, the chief expenditures of the government, everything went as they suggested while the rank and file of us fared as we might and were happy if we had any small share in the prosperity which they organized for themselves. They were the trustees, we were their wards and took part in the common life as they planned and directed.

"What went on in the trustee meetings we were very seldom allowed to learn—we learned only by congressional investigations or by trials in court, which the trustees complained, sadly interfered with the regular course of busifacturers of agricultural implement and prove by their eagerness for the foreign business and their rapid expansion of it that they can afford to do so, even with the additional cost of the ocean freights.

"But such changes did not compare with the ideas and plans of the trustees and the President vetoed the free list. I dare say he was right from his point of view, for he represented the trustees and not the people.

"The trustees represent also the big bankers in whose hands our banking system lies to be manipulated, and no Republican administration, no Republican manipulated, and no Republican administration, no Republican Congress, has attempted to serve the farmer as he ought to be served in the matter of credits, "It is practically impossible for the farmer to borrow money on the kind of securities ordinarily demanded by the banks. It does not serve his purpose to borrow it for the short period insisted upon by most bankers. Other countries have discovered how to assist him."
